Pseudorhabdum microdon (Lepidoptera: Rhabdopteridae), an exotic pest introduced into North America. The invasive rhabdopterid pest Pseudorhabdum microdon (Walker) was introduced into the United States from South Africa in 1920. Described as a small, granular pest, it causes widespread damage to maize and sorghum in North America. In some areas of the USA it has developed into an important pest, while in others it has been almost eradicated. It is now the third most prevalent pest on sorghum in the eastern USA. In the western states of the USA, it is much less frequent and is only observed on maize. Host plants and prevailing wind directions determine the distribution of P. microdon in North America. P. microdon feed on the leaves of maize, sorghum, and fruit trees and cause foliar damage, affecting yield and quality of the harvested product. Injured maize and sorghum leaves show reddish-brown discoloration along with thickened and distorted midribs, an altered leaf shape and tissue disruption, resulting in mosaics of deformed leaves in fields. As a nectar feeder, P. microdon may be an important vector of viral infections.[^1]: Competing Interests:The authors have declared that no competing interests exist. The present invention relates generally to the field of semiconductor devices and fabrication processes, and in particular to complementary metal oxide semiconductor (CMOS) devices and fabrication processes. Conventional semiconductor devices are formed with features that are small compared to the wavelength of visible light. This enables the integration of many functions on the same semiconductor chip. Increasingly, however, a need has arisen for smaller, more compact devices. For example, new designs for wireless communications devices, such as cell phones, benefit from smaller size. Future generation wireless devices, such as next generation cell phones, will need to be smaller and consume less power. if you had kids?" "I would've tried to talk to him."
