Substantial progress in the proteomic analysis of cephalopods has been made since the first comprehensive attempt in 2005; however, whether or not this is the case for octopuses and cuttlefish is not known. Additionally, techniques that were commonly used for studying the proteome of these invertebrates have their limitations. In order to attain a proteomic picture of the giant squid (Architeuthis), the first elasmobranch with a large brain and a central nervous system, the following step is taken: a robust protocol for the quantitative analysis of the squid brain proteome is developed. Specifically, the combination of sodium dodecyl sulfate PAGE, liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry, and on-bead digestion with trypsin is utilized to characterize the proteome of the giant squid brain. The number of identified proteins (by using a Spectrum Mill liquid chromatography-tandem mass spectrometry system) is significantly increased with the latter three steps. The following are the results: a total of 385 protein entries are identified, with a peptide false discovery rate of less than 1% across all analyses, and 189 of the 265 entries which were identified from the on-bead analysis were considered to be highly reliable. In conclusion, the application of this protocol will provide a comprehensive picture of the proteome of Architeuthis.In some telecommunication systems, communications networks are used to exchange messages among several interacting spatially-separated devices. Networks can be classified according to geographic scope, which could be, for example, a metropolitan area, a local area, or a personal area. Such networks would 6d1f23a050
