In the world of collecting, there are certain areas that you just have to visit when you are out and about to see the best of what's out there. This is one of those areas. But I'm not going to name a particular place, as every destination has something to offer. And there are always good finds. On a recent trip, I visited a flea market that a friend told me to visit. I'll share some of the highlights and also report on what I found on the second day of my visit. The first thing to know is that there are 3 big markets, and then there are hundreds, thousands, and millions of smaller markets, each just a small part of what's on offer. (This is a generalization, but it's true enough for the purposes of illustration.) There is a large 'International' section. Here there are a number of vendors who sell things that you don't find anywhere else. For example, there are vendors that have all kinds of sunglasses and sunglasses accessories. My friends often tell me that they just can't find glasses that fit their prescription (and they're often prescriptions I've never seen!). Also, there are vendors that make custom frames, for men and women. Often the frames are not that modern looking, but have their faces. There's a lot of humor in some of the designs and I think most of the people who see them find them quite amusing. I've even had people who I've introduced to the vendor ask for a frame like that as a gift for a friend! There is an area where people sell antique clocks. I was going to buy one, but ended up browsing through and looking at the rest. There were clocks from different places and time periods and with a variety of styles and designs. One interesting item I saw was a Swiss clock that looked like an instrument panel for a spaceship! There are T-shirts, t-shirts, and T-shirts. I bought a back pack and wore it the whole weekend. I made friends with a vendor, and we talk from time to time, exchanging our thoughts on our days and each others' lives. I don 6d1f23a050
